

EXTRA!

I have been selected by the American Numismatic Association to conduct the Auction Sale for the A.N.A. Convention to be held in Chicago August 25-26, 1956.

The privilege of conducting this Sale is most gratifying especially so since it will be the third National Sale I have handled, the first at Milwaukee in 1950, the second at Phoenix in 1951.

We have also conducted eight Central States Numismatic Society Convention Sales and two for the host club, the Chicago Coin Club. Our being selected to handle this very important Convention Sale is certainly evidence that our past Sales have been satisfactory to the organization, the bidders and the consignors.

WE BELIEVE . . .

That the A.N.A. Convention in Chicago will attract by far the largest number of collectors and dealers ever assembled for a numismatic event. In 1954 over 500 attended the C.S.N.S. Convention in Chicago - a record few A.N.A. Conventions have equalled.

We intend to produce a Sale Catalogue worthy of this event. It's a golden opportunity for anyone desiring to sell their collection at auction. Consignments of choice material solicited.

EARLY COINS OF BRITAIN

Back in the distant past, before the Roman conquest of Britain by Julius Caesar, the British Isles had a metallic currency similar to the early Greek types.

Greek coins evidently had been brought to Britain by traders or merchant seamen, and what was more natural than that early Britons should pattern their first rude coinage after those of the Greeks. These first pieces were crude, slavish and of a caricature type showing little originality and rather poor workmanship; the British die makers evidently lacked the skill and artistry of the contemporary skilled Greek coiners.

These early coins of Britain came in gold, silver and bronze. One of these early gold coins of a period of circa 200 B.C. showed a horse along with various ornaments. The reverse convex, plain; this coin was minted in Kent.

The horse seemed a favorite and would indicate the general use of these animals by the early Britons.

In addition to horses, various floral and astronomical signs were shown crudely on the coins. Crescents, crosses, chariots and more important, crude attempts at picturing the human head. These designs were employed on small silver coins of perhaps half the size of a Roman denarius called Sceattae and they are constantly being unearthed in present day Britain. These Sceattae were issued during the earlier Saxon period.

Among the earliest types of the broad, thin silver penny, were those coins of Ethelbert I and II; Eadberht, Cuthred, Baldred, Eavald, Offa, Egcberth, Coenvulf and Cynethryth, (Offa's queen). Coins of Offa are very rare, and of Coenvulf even more so.

Later silver pennies of kings like Edgar, Edmund, Edward the Confessor, Aethelred II, and of William I are easier to obtain although some moneyers examples bring high prices. The later medieval English silver pence are easily obtained today. They are all interesting and most have a crude head of the reigning monarch who issued

MARIA JOSEFA ORTIZ DE DOMINGUEZ

Women are rarely famous enough to earn portrait positions upon their country's paper money and coinage.

One such woman in Mexico
was Dona Maria Josefa Ortiz
de Dominguez, born in Mexico
City between 1773 and 1775.
Her father was Don Juan Ortiz;
Her mother Dona Manuela Giron

MARIA JOSEFA ORTIZ (Continued)

She was orphaned when young and reared under the care of a sister, Dona Maria Sotero.
She attended the Vizcayan
College from 1789 to 1791.

Licenciado don Miguel
Dominguez visited the college
in 1791, fell in love with her, and they were married the same year. Soon after he became the corregidor of Queretaro and she has since become known as "La Corregidora."

They both favored the independence move, and "Literary"
meetings were attended in Queretaro to plan the course of action.

Royalist sympathizers tried to get the corregidor to prosecute suspected revolutionists, but he always released them. One of the revolutionists was the mayor,
or alcalde, Ignacio Perez.
Josefa's bedroom was over his room and they arranged a signal in case she needed to communicate with him -- three taps of the foot on the floor
This signal she gave on the night of Sept. 14, 1810.
Perez came to her locked door
where she told him that the Royalists had learned of the plans to revolt, and that Father Hidalgo must be informed immediately. Perez personally carried the news
to San Miguel, arriving at dawn on Sept. 15, 1810.

The manner of communication through the door is at variance--some saying it was through a keyhole, some through a wicker grating, and others saying the whole story
is just a legend.

The revolt was begun that day and on the night of the 15th, the corregidor and Josefa were imprisoned. They were soon released and went to live in Mexico City.

As a heroine, she was loyal through and through. As a mother, she was strict with her children, not even permitting them to dance.

She died in April 1829, of pleuresy, in Mexico City and later her remains were taken to Queretaro.

Her portrait appears upon the five peso paper bills of Mexico, on the bronze five
centavo issued in 1942-45,
and on the nickel five centavo issued in 1950. Some call these pieces "Josefas."

HARD CURRENCY OF EARLY CANADA

From the commencement of the nineteenth century to the year 1858, the government of early Canada shirked all responsibility in providing an official stable currency for the struggling young country.

It seems almost inconceivable that the government should have allowed this immense country to make-shift with traders and bank tokens and almost any piece of metal any enterprising person chose to put into circulation.

Some of these token pieces were little more than trader's advertisements and did not even pretend to serve the purposes of trade. Such pieces, although some of them are scarce, do not appear worthy of inclusion in a collection of Canadian coins, but nevertheless are included by many of the foremost collectors.

On the other hand a great many beautiful tokens were issued to serve the honest purpose of trade, and in many cases had a long period of circulation and no doubt helped storekeepers to provide much needed change.

Included in the early token issues of Canada are those of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, separate colonies which later joined the confederation. These tokens are not of as great a variety as those issued by Upper and Lower Canada.

Newfoundland, too, had a series of tokens; of these the best known are those of the Rutherford Brothers of Harbour Grace and St. John's. The writer considers these pieces to be more in the nature of medals or advertising cards rather than tokens since no value is expressed and they are fabricated in brass rather than in copper. However, it is true that the value was not always stamped on all token money.

A feeble attempt to provide an official currency in place of the token currency was made by the government in 1858 with the issuance of one, five ten and twenty cent pieces in copper and silver. About this time the miscellaneous token currency went into an eclipse and by 1860 no further new issues appeared for the convenience of trade.

In concluding this brief review of Canadian tokens, it may be pointed out that a specialized collection can be made of the different die varieties, dates, and types in design, inscription, thickness or thinness of planchet or flan, as well as edge varieties of many of the pieces.

Some pieces were counterfeited and can be included in a collection. Also one should include in the series those tokens of British and Irish ancestry which had a wide circulation in Canada in many instances.

There is a difference, however, in all these tokens in that mint or uncirculated condition has a marked influence upon the market value of every piece in the eyes of an enthusiastic collector. Age, it is true, lends enchantment, but it is beauty of condition and preservation of the piece that the numismatist seeks.
